ABSTRACT

This guide to people, courses, and institutions concerned with women's studies provides a view of the movement's size and scope and a record of the movement's history. Designed to provide an overview of the institutional development of courses, the pioneering instructors, and the sponsoring departments, the guide is intended for use by feminist scholars/teachers and historians. The guide lists courses at accredited undergraduate and graduate higher education institutions in the United States only. It includes 4,658 courses and 2,964 male and female feminist teachers at 885 universities and colleges. The guide is arranged in three sections. The first section lists institutions, arranged alphabetically, and their faculty members involved in women's studies with their respective courses and dates offered. The second section lists persons involved in women's studies with information about field, institutions, courses, and years the courses were offered. The third section is arranged by discipline or topic. Under each, related courses are listed alphabetically with their instructors. Each person, course, and institution is listed in all three sections and, thus, can be easily cross-referenced. The guide concludes with a list of 112 women's studies programs, arranged alphabetically by institution, and their instructors and degrees offered. (ND)

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

This volume is the result of two years of planning and eighteen months of labor by its three editors and others at the Feminist Press and the College at Old Westbury, especially Toni Cerutti, Valerie Kara, Helen Schrader and Ida McDaniels, and copy-editors and proof-readers Sari Hastings Best, Constance Christopher, Lucy Prince, and David Rosenberg. A grant from the Ford Foundation made this intensive effort possible: we wish to thank Mariam Chamberlain for her support.

But this volume could not exist without the prior three years of record-keeping by other groups and individuals. Sally Fenstermaker (Berk) and Carol Ahlum were students at Goucher College and assistants to Florence Howe, Chairperson of the Modern Language Association's (MLA) Commission on the Status of Women, when they began to organize correspondence into lists of women's studies courses for publication. The first list of 110 courses was published by the Commission as a broadside for distribution at the MLA's annual convention of 1970. The MLA's Commission continued its support of what was to become the Clearinghouse on Women's Studies through the spring of 1971 when Ms. Howe moved to the State University of New York/College at Old Westbury. There, with the assistance of Ms. Ahlum and a grant from the National Endowment for the Humanities (RO-5085-72-54), the record-keeping continued. In the summer of 1972, two work-study students at Old Westbury, Michelina Fitzmaurice and Joanna Miller, replaced Ms. Ahlum, and the Clearinghouse became an educational project of The Feminist Press. The Clearinghouse and The Press wish to express appreciation to the State University of New York/College at Old Westbury for its support.

During the period between October 1971 and the summer of 1973, three bibliographical lists of women's studies courses – called "Guides" – were issued by the Clearinghouse, all now subsumed in this volume. [See the back of the volume for a description of the Clearinghouse's functions and publications.]

We are grateful, too, for the cooperation of other feminist enterprises generous enough to share resources and information: the Women's History Research Center and Library, formerly of Berkeley; KNOW, Inc., a women's press in Pittsburgh; the Project on the Status of Women of the Association of American Colleges in Washington D.C.; and the several dozen women's caucuses and commissions linked to professional associations.

Finally, and most important, we wish to acknowledge the obvious: no clearinghouse can exist without its constituency — those who want information of the sort contained in this volume were, to begin with, those who could supply it. We wish to thank the thousands of feminists who have written to us about their work: to them and to the record-keepers this volume is dedicated.

INTRODUCTION

By Florence Howe

During the mid-sixties, when a handful of feminists were teaching women's history or literature or discussing sex roles in their classrooms, the phrase "women's studies" had not yet been invented. While it is not clear who first coined the phrase, by the summer of 1970, "female studies," "feminist studies," and "women's studies" were in use to describe a growing body of new courses and research. This volume reflects one aspect of that development: the alternative curriculum invented mainly by graduate students and young college and university teachers during the past five to six years. In scope and in the rapidity of its extension across the country, it would be difficult to find an historical parallel to "women's studies."

Curriculum does not fall from the sky: it grows out of the experience, consciousness, and knowledge of scholar/teachers. In this case, it grew from the sudden and shocking apprehension – by late 1969 – of the standard college curriculum as male-centered and male-biased. Why were women never mentioned in history courses? Why were assumptions about human development based chiefly or only on studies of males? Why were so few women writers studied and almost no women painters? Why were women rarely mentioned, except as comic relief, in law courses? With these and many other questions, feminists began to review the curriculum and, as important, to initiate supporting research. The awareness of the need was primary. But none of the courses contained in this volume could have been offered without a concommitant search for information. Thus, women's studies both grew from and in turn nourished a new explosion of knowledge.

As an educational movement, women's studies developed during the same period in which the women's movement more generally extended itself into the political, social, and economic life of the country. The National Organization of Women (NOW) grew from an organization of two thousand to one of tens of thousands; class action suits on behalf of women against universities were brought by the Women's Equity Action League; the National Women's Political Caucus was founded along with other feminist organizations of various political hues; and a feminist counter-culture with visibility in such mass media enterprises as Ms. continued to flourish. It is the same period that saw the Supreme Court's ruling on abortion and the burgeoning of court suits by feminists on issues ranging from credit to equal educational opportunity.

Women's studies was able to grow on campuses for at least two reasons external to the women's movement itself: first, the movements for educational reform in the sixties had eased the administrative channels for change: chairmen and deans were, by 1970, well-accustomed to requests for relevant courses; and some of them welcomed such requests as a means of keeping enrollments high. Second, unlike Black studies and other studies of minority peoples or areas, women's studies had one immediate built-in advantage: women were 42 percent of the undergraduate population. A college could not claim to be serving its students' curricular needs, if it was at the same time ignoring half the student population.

But external reasons alone cannot account for the rapid spread of women's studies in five years from 100 courses to the 4658 contained in this book; from the two programs that existed in 1969 to the 112 operating in 1974. Undergraduates feeling the thrust of the women's movement welcomed women's studies courses, and, on some campuses, organized for their extension into degree-granting programs. Feminist faculty, conscious of the need for communicating with others around the country, began a correspondence that became the Clearinghouse on Women's Studies. Published bibliographies of courses and programs were used by feminists to convince administrators of the legitimate existence of women's studies. Most important, the traditional curriculum proved vulnerable to the charge of male bias and the resurgence of interest in feminism proved energizing for research.

As a single introductory course or as a group of courses called a "program," women's studies was originally conceived of as compensatory – a supplement to the male-biased curriculum. "The Sociology of Women," for example, might be expected to raise the consciousness of students through providing them with information about the function and inferior status of women; "The History of Women in the U.S." would remind students of the dignity and heroism of women in history; "Images of Women in American Literature" might attempt a dual task: to reflect those limited portraits of women found in the work of male writers and to restore lost women writers to significant positions in the American literary canon. Whatever the specific curricular task, many pioneers in the early phase of women's studies assumed that their work would be soon absorbed into the "mainstream" undergraduate curriculum. Thus, women's studies would fade away within the decade, having accomplished its second main task: reform of the male-biased curriculum. This early vision was incorrect, for at least two reasons.

First, the burgeoning research in women's history, to take but one example, both increases the need for new women's studies courses and makes more difficult the rapid absorption of new findings into the traditional curriculum. Research on frontier life or in labor history, for example, calls for holistic curricular revision, not patchwork. Second, it is notoriously easier to add to the curriculum in higher education than to change it: courses in "Women Writers" continue to proliferate, while freshman and sophomore English, as well as the major, continues to focus on male writers and male experience. Thus, five years from its origins, women's studies shows every sign of continuing to develop as an alternative curriculum, and no sign of fading away.

Whatever the future of women's studies, Who's Who and Where in Women's Studies provides an exhaustive record of the movement's history as well as a view of its present size and scope. The volume was organized so that it might serve not only as a guide to the thousands of feminist scholar/teachers, but also as a reliable data base for historians and other scholars. Its three sections light up three different faces of women's studies: institutional development of courses; the pioneering faculty; the sponsoring departments. Dates chart the annual increment in the number of courses; combined with the individual histories of feminist teachers, dates also chart the geographical dispersal of women's studies. In addition the volume contains a list of women's studies programs, the degrees they offer, and their coordinators or directors.

Five years ago, women's studies followed the strength of the women's movement: up the east coast from Baltimore to New England and down the west coast from Seattle to Los Angeles. There were relatively few courses and no programs in the midwest when women's studies first began. As this volume indicates, no region of the country today is without women's studies courses and programs. Five years ago, too, most courses were being offered in history, English, or sociology departments. As the departmental listings indicate, those are still dominant, but hardly an area of the traditional curriculum has not felt the touch of women's studies. In addition, significant new development in interdisciplinary studies is reflected by the departmental listings.

With some regrets, and chiefly for reasons of economy, the editors chose to exclude women's studies course offerings in continuing education programs, women's centers, and other alternative feminist educational institutions, as well as in colleges and universities in Canada and abroad. To have included all of these – there are more than 500 women's centers alone – would have doubled the size of this volume. Thus, the 4658 courses included here – many of them offered repeatedly these past five years – are accredited undergraduate or graduate courses in United States institutions of higher education. Of the more than 2000 colleges and universities in the country, 885 are listed in this volume as offering women's studies courses. One hundred and twelve of these institutions offer women's studies programs, approximately a third of which are degree-granting. Five institutions now offer the M.A. in women's studies or women's history, and the State University of New York at Binghampton offers a Ph.D. in women's history.

In 1971, when the first major listing of women's studies courses was published, it included 610 courses at 210 institutions, taught by 500 teachers. The number of feminist teachers, female and male, listed in Who's Who is 2964. On these teacher/scholars – and on their students – rests the major responsibility for the future of women's studies.

Will there be another volume of Who's Who? Even before this volume had been completely typeset, we were asked that question, and frankly, we cannot answer it now. We understand well the mobility of academics, especially those also involved in a social movement, and the transiency, therefore, of the information we have included in this volume. Significant additions, emendations, or corrections should be sent to the Clearinghouse for publication in the Women's Studies Newsletter. The publication of future editions of Who's Who and Where in Women's Studies will depend on the response to this volume and on the progress of the women's studies movement.

NOTES ON THE ARRANGEMENT

In List I, faculty members are arranged alphabetically within each institutional entry. If a course was team-taught by two to four people, it appears only once under the instructor whose name falls first alphabetically. Where the "team" consisted of more than five faculty members, the course appears only under the instructor whose name falls first alphabetically, the rest being indicated as "others."

An asterisk preceding a name indicates that that person no longer teaches at the institution listed. To find that faculty member's current institutional affiliation, the reader must use List II. In List II, each faculty member's most recent institutional affiliation appears first, though in several instances we were unable to locate the most current information.

List III, arranged by department, names course titles and faculty only. To find the institution, the reader must use the Faculty list. The only exception to this rule occurs when courses have been designated as taught by "Staff," or "Biography Collective," for example. In such instances, the institution's name is included in the entry.

In all three lists, many abbreviations have been used, most of which are self-evident but all of which appear below. In addition, two symbols have been used throughout: the dagger † to flag graduate courses; the plus sign in parentheses (+) to indicate that a large section of the course is devoted to women, although the entire course is not.

WOMEN'S STUDIES PROGRAMS

Most of the programs listed below are interdisciplinary, i.e., they combine courses in literature, language or culture with work in sociology, anthropology, economics, political science, history, philosophy, psychology, biology and related fields. Some programs offer minors (denoted by *), others award the B.A. (denoted by ) or A.A. degree (denoted by ), still others offer the M.A. (denoted by +). Only one offers the Ph.D. (denoted by †). Programs listed without a specific label offer a roster of elective courses. Where no chairperson is listed, either the program is still in the process of organization or it has chosen to function through a committee, rather than a single individual.

THE CLEARINGHOUSE ON WOMEN'S STUDIES

A unique service to college and public school teachers, the Clearinghouse on Women's Studies, an educational project of The Feminist Press, functions as a resource, spreading news about women's studies. Today, its files house information and syllabi from more than 4,600 women's studies courses and more than 100 programs on U.S. college campuses. The Clearinghouse also provides a similar information network and curriculum gathering service for elementary and secondary schools. Educators and feminists involved in organizing and teaching women's studies or in creating nonsexist classrooms send us their curriculum outlines, course materials and institutional strategies.

In addition, the Clearinghouse sponsors an in-service education project for public school teachers, offering introductory courses on the socialization of girls and boys and advanced courses on the teaching of women's history and literature. In the fall of 1974, The Feminist Press sponsored the first national conference on in-service education and women's studies for educators from school systems around the country. Clearinghouse staff consult with school systems and individual teachers interested in changing their curriculum.

Requests come in daily from people throughout the country who want to know where to begin – they are in need of feminist guidelines, strategies, and materials for creating new curriculum and stimulating awareness about sexism. In response to these requests, and with the help of others involved in women's studies, the Clearinghouse publishes resource guides, curriculum materials, bibliographies, directories, and a quarterly, the Women's Studies Newsletter, designed to provide information and support for women's studies at every level of education. For complete information about prices and ordering, see the most recent Feminist Press catalogue.

Publications

Women's Studies Newsletter. A quarterly report on women's studies in public schools and higher education, featuring thoughtful pieces about the future of feminist education, "close-ups" of feminist courses and programs, news of institutional developments, and brief listings of jobs, publications, conferences, projects.

Female Studies VI: Closer to the Ground – Women's Classes, Criticism, Programs (1972). Edited by Nancy Hoffman, Cynthia Secor, and Adrian Tinsley, and prepared for the Commission on the Status of Women of the Modern Language Association. Thirty-two essays on the practice of women's studies in the classroom, on the development of feminist literary criticism, and on teaching materials.

Female Studies VII: Going Strong – New Courses, New Programs (1973). Edited by Deborah Silverton Rosenfelt. Descriptions of twelve new women's studies programs and more than sixty women's studies courses. Two extraordinary bibliographies – art history and anthropology; and a useful introductory essay charting the state of women's studies.

Female Studies IX: Teaching about Women in the Foreign Language Curriculum – French, Spanish, German (1974). Edited by Sidonie Cassirer with the assistance of Brigitte Coste, and prepared for the Commission on the Status of Women of the Modern Language Association. Essays, bibliographies, and syllabi – the work of some ninety contributing scholars.

Female Studies X: Student Work – Learning to Speak (1974). Edited by Deborah Silverton Rosenfelt. Poetry, autobiography, short fiction, drama, essays, and literary criticism by undergraduates in women's studies from institutions all over the country.

High School Feminist Studies. Edited by Carol Ahlum and Jacqueline M. Fralley, with an Introduction by Florence Howe. Inventive curriculum and pedagogy by twenty-five high school teachers, chiefly in English and social studies.

Feminist Resources for Schools and Colleges: A Guide to Curriculum Materials. Edited by Carol Ahlum and Jacqueline M. Fralley. An annotated bibliography of books, pamphlets, slide shows, films, tapes, with prices and information about how to order.

Nonsexist Curricular Materials for Elementary Schools. Edited by Laurie Olsen Johnson. Checklist, workbook, and activities – in a looseleaf format – for discovering and improving nonsexist attitudes in the classroom. Includes a comprehensive bibliography.

Women's Studies for Teachers and Administrators: A Packet of In-Service Education Materials. Edited by Sharon Kaylen and Florence Howe. In a looseleaf format, essays, legal information, syllabi, bibliographies, and other materials useful for initiating in-service education courses aimed at eliminating sexist practices and curriculum.

Strong Women: An Annotated Bibliography of Paperbacks for the High School Classroom. Edited by Deborah Silverton Rosenfelt. More than 100 annotations in fiction, autobiography and biography, poetry, drama, history and social science, with special attention to the reading levels of students.

"Why Would A Girl Go Into Medicine?" – Medical Education in the United States: A Guide for Women. By Margaret A. Campbell, M.D. A comprehensive and reliable report on discrimination suffered by women in medical schools, with suggestions about how to challenge the sexist status quo.

Cases and Materials on Women and the Law. Edited by Marjorie Fine Knowles. A packet of unbound materials containing concise annotated accounts of twelve legal cases relating to women's rights and the texts of relevant statutes.

She Said/He Said: An Annotated Bibliography of Language and Sex, Including Nonverbal Communication. Edited by Nancy M. Henley and Barrie Thorne. The most inclusive contemporary listing of research and resources on the subject of sex roles, linguistics, nonverbal communication, and the language of sexism.

THE FEMINIST PRESS offers alternatives in education and in literature. Founded in 1970, this non-profit, tax-exempt educational and publishing organization works to eliminate sexual stereotypes in books and schools, providing instead a new (or neglected) literature with a broader vision of human potential.

Our books—high-quality, low-cost paperbacks—include reprints of important works by women writers, feminist biographies of women, and nonsexist children's books.

The Clearinghouse on Women's Studies publishes resource guides, curricular materials, bibliographies, directories, and a newsletter, designed to provide information and support for women's studies at every educational level.

The Curriculum and In-Service Projects research sexism in the schools and explore ways to counter the effects of sex-role stereotyping. They develop supplementary materials for high school English and social studies classrooms, and work with teachers on new methods to help students become their best and freest selves.

Through this work we can begin to recreate the forgotten history of women, begin to create a more humane and equitable society for the future.

For a catalogue of all our publications, write to us. We hope that you will.
